11		Culture “The Hunting of the Snark” is a famous nonsense poem written by English author Lewis Carroll and published in 1876 during the Victorian era. It reflects the Victorian fascination with exploration, adventure, and fantastical creatures, while also parodying the serious tone often used in contemporary adventure and expedition stories. The word “Snark” itself is a fictional term created by Carroll, and the creature is intentionally left mysterious and difficult to define. The poem follows a group of hunters who travel across the sea in search of a Snark, led by the Bellman, who navigates using a map that is completely blank. As the journey continues, the hunters encounter increasingly absurd situations and strange dangers. When one of them finally discovers the Snark, he suddenly disappears, leaving behind no explanation. The story's combination of Victorian adventure themes, wordplay, and absurdity made The Hunting of the Snark an important example of English literary nonsense.
